To whom it may concern:

I met Dharmin last summer when he interned at Software Engineering Professionals from 6/3/2013 - 8/30/2013. I was the lead for the project that he worked on, creation of an iPad relationship management app. The project team had five interns, myself, and a senior software engineer at SEP.

Dharmin had no prior knowledge of iPad development, but he picked up the language and environment in no time, becoming a major contributor to many of the important features of the app. I was very impressed with his initiative, enthusiasm, work ethic and extremely fast learning skills.

Dharmin quickly blended in with SEP and even participated in our startup weekend. There he pitched a project idea that was voted one of the best. I was struck by his positive approach to problems, and his ability to see them through to the end. He was also very receptive to constructive criticism, learning quickly, and applying suggested changes graciously. He was very independent, unfazed by difficult problems, and quick to research new approaches to solving them.

I believe that Dharmin will be an asset anywhere, and have no hesitation in recommending him as a valuable addition to any company.
